Have students list seven of their favorite activities. Have them then discuss how a wheel chair might change their ability to enjoy these activities.

Have students create a power-point about special needs schools. Have them include approximate budgets for a public school and for a special needs school. Have them compare the two figures and discuss why the prices differ.

Have students prepare a “Reverse trick-or-treat” for the local children's hospital. Have them first arrange a toy drive and then appoint 2 students to be excused for the day to pass the toys out in the cancer ward. Allow them to use this towards their community service hours.

Have students write a paper about their plans after high school. What is their main goal and how will they achieve it?
