Have students keep a 2 week diary in which they list ways they have experienced peer-pressure. Allow them to use personal experiences, song lyrics, television ads or even movies as examples.

Help students use their diaries to create a graph on the number of times mass media makes them feel pressured. Be exact in the way they are pressured (newspaper, music videos) on the vertical grids. Then list on the horizontal grids the issue they are pressured into (sex, drugs). As a class discuss these findings.
